Section B

The extract below is from The Amazing Mr Blunden, by Antonia Barber. Read the extract carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

If it had not been such a rain-lashed, windy evening, the people who jostled the pavements of Camden Town might have noticed something a little odd about a white-haired elderly gentleman who made his way against the steady flow of the crowd. But they shivered as they left the warm brightness of the Underground station and, burying their chins deep in the lapels of their coats, butted their way out into the driving rain seeing nothing but the puddled pavements and a great multitude of hurrying feet.

Perhaps the strangest thing about the old man was that he walked upright, untroubled by the cold needles of the rain. And though he moved against the press of the crowd, he never once stepped aside, but passed through the groups of burly workmen, the thin-faced office boys, the breathless, scampering girls, without seeming to touch any of them.

He moved purposefully, past the neon-lit self-service laundry and the shuttered fish-shop, past the busy greengrocer's spilling its wooden boxes and pyramids of bright fruit across the pavement outside, until he reached a row of terraced houses which stood back from the road behind wilderness gardens. Here he paused uncertainly and stared at the first house which lay in a pool of shadow behind a stunted tree. A small light shone from the basement window, making a halo of brightness on the rain outside. The old man turned and, making his way along the path and down the steps, he tapped hesitantly upon the basement door.

The woman who opened it was still young and would have been pretty if she had not looked so tired.

'Mrs … er … Mrs Allen,' inquired the old man. He sounded strangely nervous.

The woman nodded cautiously and at once he launched into a little speech like a doorstep salesman uncertain of his reception. 'I represent a firm of solicitors, madam, the firm of Blunden, Blunden, Claverton and … '

'I suppose it's about the rent?'

The woman's interruption seemed to throw the old man completely. He stopped his speech abruptly and looked deeply hurt at being suspected of so unwelcome a mission. He shook his head several times reproachfully and seemed to have difficulty in finding the broken thread of his thoughts.

'Indeed no!' he said at last. 'I am not a debt-collector. I am a senior partner in the firm of Blunden, Blunden, Claverton and … dear me … now what is that young fellow's name … ?' He paused absent-mindedly and gazed up thoughtfully into the falling rain.

'Well, no matter' – he recollected himself – 'the important thing is that the news I bring will, I am sure, prove entirely welcome.'

The woman looked doubtful, as if she no longer believed in good news. Then she shivered: it was cold standing in the doorway. 'You'd better come in,' she said, 'out of the rain.'

The room was small and crowded and untidy. There was a pool of light over a table to one side where a boy and a girl sat eating their tea. The boy started to his feet as they came in but the old man stopped him. 'No, no!' he said with grave courtesy, 'pray continue. It is I who must apologise for disturbing your meal.'

'Do sit down,' said the woman, moving some knitting from a chair by the fire, 'and perhaps you would like a cup of tea?'

'The chair I accept gratefully,' said the old man, 'but the tea I must decline. It is many years since I have been … er … allowed to drink it. But if you will pour some for yourself and sit with me for a moment, I will come straight to the purpose of my visit.'

The woman did as she was told. Clutching her cup in nervous hands, she perched herself on the edge of a chair and waited as if for another blow to fall.

The children ate steadily, watching their mother and their unexpected visitor with unmoving eyes. The boy thought: He's a weird old thing. His clothes are so old-fashioned and he talks like someone out of David Copperfield. The girl noticed that his clothes were not steaming in the heat of the fire. They seemed to be quite dry although he had not carried an umbrella. But it was only a small fire, she told herself, and as he was outside the circle of the overhead light, it was hard to be certain whether he was wet or not. 'I will not … er … stand upon ceremony,' the old man began. 'I shall come … er … straight to the point … ' But he seemed curiously reluctant to do so.

Section C

The extract below is from David Copperfield, by Charles Dickens.

Read the extract carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

'Mr Wickfield's at home, ma'am,' said Uriah Heep, 'if you'll please to walk in there'— pointing with his long hand to the room he meant.

We got out; and leaving him to hold the pony, went into a long low parlour looking towards the street, from the window of which I caught a glimpse, as I went in, of Uriah Heep breathing into the pony's nostrils, and immediately covering them with his hand, as if he were putting some spell upon him. Opposite to the tall old chimney-piece were two portraits: one of a gentleman with grey hair (though not by any means an old man) and black eyebrows, who was looking over some papers tied together with red tape; the other, of a lady, with a very placid and sweet expression of face, who was looking at me.

I believe I was turning about in search of Uriah's picture, when, a door at the farther end of the room opening, a gentleman entered, at sight of whom I turned to the first-mentioned portrait again, to make quite sure that it had not come out of its frame. But it was stationary; and as the gentleman advanced into the light, I saw that he was some years older than when he had had his picture painted.

'Miss Betsey Trotwood,' said the gentleman, 'pray walk in. I was engaged for a moment, but you'll excuse my being busy. You know my motive. I have but one in life.'

Miss Betsey thanked him, and we went into his room, which was furnished as an office, with books, papers, tin boxes, and so forth. It looked into a garden, and had an iron safe let into the wall; so immediately over the mantelshelf, that I wondered, as I sat down, how the sweeps got round it when they swept the chimney.

'Well, Miss Trotwood,' said Mr Wickfield; for I soon found that it was he, and that he was a lawyer, and steward of the estates of a rich gentleman of the county; 'what wind blows you here? Not an ill wind, I hope?'

'No,' replied my aunt. 'I have not come for any law.'

'That's right, ma'am,' said Mr Wickfield. 'You had better come for anything else.' His hair was quite white now, though his eyebrows were still black. He had a very agreeable face, and, I thought, was handsome. There was a certain richness in his complexion, which I had been long accustomed, under Peggotty's tuition, to connect with port wine; and I fancied it was in his voice too, and referred his growing corpulency to the same cause. He was very cleanly dressed, in a blue coat, striped waistcoat, and nankeen trousers; and his fine frilled shirt and cambric neckcloth looked unusually soft and white, reminding my strolling fancy (I call to mind) of the plumage on the breast of a swan.

24. What do we learn about Mr Wickfield in this extract?

Select all that are correct.

A He is a lawyer.

B He is a married man.

C He is relatively wealthy.

D He drinks a little too much.

E He manages the properties of a wealthy landowner.

25. What do we learn about Mr Wickfield's appearance from the narrator?

Select all that are correct.

A He is very thin.

B He is pleasant looking.

C He is plump.

D His eyebrows contrast with his hair.

E He dressed in an understated manner.

26. Select the TWO most accurate phrases to describe Mr Wickfield's portrait.

A Freshly painted

B A good likeness

C Unbecoming

D Not recent

E Highly embellished

27. ‘what wind blows you here? Not an ill wind, I hope?’ (lines 22–23)

What does this line mean?

Pick the most accurate explanation.

A Isn’t it blustery today? Your journey here wasn’t too uncomfortable, I hope?

B What is your reason for coming? You are not sick, I hope?

C What made you decide to visit? You are not cross with me, I hope?

D What brings you here? Not a misfortune, I hope?

E Did you find out what was happening? Nothing bad, I hope?

28. What does ‘my strolling fancy’ (line 32) mean?

Pick the most accurate explanation.

A My flamboyant walk

B My wandering imagination

C My love of rambling

D My yearning to go for a walk

E My roaming girlfriend

29. Think about what we learn about the narrator. Which of these is NOT revealed in the extract?

Select one answer.

A They are the niece or nephew of Miss Betsey Trotwood.

B They are inquisitive.

C They are male.

D They are observant.

E They have not met Mr Wickfield before.

30. In his portrait, Mr Wickfield 'was looking over some papers tied together with red tape' (line 8).

Select the TWO things that the phrase 'red tape' has come to mean today.

A Intentionally misleading

B Excessive bureaucracy

C Great respect and honour

D Official rules and procedures

E Something to be remembered

Section D

Marking Guidance

For each question, the maximum number of marks available is shown.

Where questions require multiple answers and use the rubric, 'Select all that are correct', negative marking should also be applied, whereby 1 mark is deducted for each incorrect answer selected down to 0 marks (note that the number of marks per question cannot be negative).

For example:

If a question is worth 2 marks and requires options A, B and C to be selected:

Award 2 marks for A, B and C selected or 1 mark for any two correct answers selected.

Award 1 mark for A, B, C and D or E selected (2 marks – 1 incorrect = 1 mark).

Award 0 marks for A, B, C, D and E selected (2 marks – 2 incorrect = 0 marks).

Award 0 marks for A, B and E selected or equivalent (1 mark – 1 incorrect = 0 marks).

1.	D	[1 mark]
2.	B	[1 mark]
3.	C	[1 mark]
4.	A	[1 mark]
5.	E	[1 mark]
6.	B	[1 mark]
7.	B, E (both answers must be correct)	[1 mark]
