Section B

The extract below is from One Moment, by Linda Green.

Read the extract carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

My name is Finn, as in Huckleberry, and there is nothing wrong with me. I know this because my dad has tried very hard to find something wrong with me, but I did OK in all the tests. It turns out I am just weird, and they don't have a test for that yet, or, if they do, my dad hasn't heard about it.

My surname is Rook-Carter, which also sounds weird because it is double-barrelled (which is the proper way to say it's two names stuck together). Mum said they did it so that my name had a bit of her and a bit of Dad in it. Only now they're getting divorced and they're fighting over who I'm going to live with, so I don't know what's going to happen to my name. Maybe I'll be Finn Rook on Mondays to Wednesdays, Finn Carter on Thursdays and Fridays and Finn Rook-Carter at the weekends when I switch between them.

When I say Mum and Dad are fighting over me, I don't mean actual fighting, like a Star Wars battle, I mean they are arguing a lot and they both have solicitors who write letters to each other that make them angry. Jayden McGreevy in my class used to write notes to me, which made me angry when I was in year four, but my mum went in to school with one of them and he got in trouble and had to write another note saying he was sorry, even though I knew he didn't mean it.

Mum and Dad have both told me that the solicitors cost a lot of money, which seems stupid because if they asked Jayden, I'm pretty sure he'd write letters to make them angry for a bag of Haribos.

I can't eat Haribos because they've got gelatine in and me and Mum are vegetarians and the kids at school don't get that because you can't see bits of dead pigs or cows in sweets, so it's another thing that makes me weird.

I keep a list of things about me that they think are weird. There are actually loads of things, but people always do top-ten lists, so this is the top-ten list of the things they seem to think are most weird:

1. Not liking football or being able to name a single player
2. Not eating Haribos
3. Having curly, red hair and not normal straight, short brown hair like them
4. Not having a mobile phone
5. Not doing gaming
6. Never having been to a McDonald's

7. Liking gardening and my hero being Alan Titchmarsh
8. Playing the ukulele
9. Not liking football (they think it's so weird, I've put it in twice)
10. Having a bee rucksack

On the last one, I don't mean having a yellow and black rucksack in the shape of a bee. I had loads of those when I was little – Mum got me a different one every year – but on my tenth birthday she gave me a grey rucksack that had bees printed on. She said it was more grown up. Dad rolled his eyes when she said that, only he didn't let her see because they are still pretending to be nice to each other in front of me and especially on birthdays. I took it to school the next week and the kids still laughed at it, so I guess Dad was right.

Anyway, it doesn't matter. The way I see it, if you're going to be weird, you may as well be weird all over, rather than think there's a little bit of you that's not weird, because they'll still laugh at you anyway.

And when I go to secondary school in September, it's going to be a whole lot worse. Mum and Dad did a lot of arguing about that as well. Dad said I couldn't go to the school most of the other kids in my class are going to, because I would get 'eaten alive at a comprehensive in Halifax'. He didn't say that in front of me, he said it in one of the arguments I overheard. They thought I was practising my ukulele in my bedroom and I was but then I had to go for a wee and I heard them arguing in the kitchen (kitchens are rubbish for arguing secretly in because they haven't got a door and I don't get why they don't know that). When Dad said I would get 'eaten alive', Mum's voice went funny and at first I thought it was because she is a vegetarian and didn't approve of anyone being eaten but then she said sometimes it was like he was embarrassed to have me as a son and he said he wasn't embarrassed, just realistic about the fact that I wouldn't fit in and she said that was why she wanted to home-educate me and he did a snorty sort of laugh and said I needed to go to a good school, not have half-baked lessons with her at the kitchen table, and she started crying and I couldn't hear anything else, so I went back to playing 'You Are My Sunshine' on my ukulele.

Section C

The extract below is from Moab is My Washpot, by Stephen Fry.

Read the extract carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

For some reason I recall it as just me and Bunce. No one else in the compartment at all. Just me, eight years and a month old, and this inexpressibly small dab of misery who told me in one hot, husky breath that his name was Samuelanthonyfarlowebunce.

I remember why we were alone now. My mother had dropped us off early at Paddington Station. My second term. The train to Stroud had a whole carriage reserved for us. Usually by the time my mother, brother and I had arrived on the platform there would have been a great bobbing of boaters dipping careless farewells into a sea of entirely unacceptable maternal hats.

Amongst the first to arrive this time, my brother had found a compartment where an older boy already sat amongst his opened tuck-box, ready to show off his pencil cases and conker skewers while I had moved respectfully forward to leave them to it. I was still only a term old after all. Besides, I wasn't entirely sure what a conker skewer might be.

The next compartment contained what appeared to be a tiny trembling woodland creature.

My brother and I had leaned from our respective windows to send the mother cheerfully on her way. We tended to be cruelly kind at these moments, taking as careless and casual a leave of her as possible and making a great show of how little it mattered that we were leaving home for such great stretches of time. Some part of us must have known inside that it was harder for her than it was for us. She would be returning to a baby and a husband who worked so hard that she hardly saw him and to all the nightmares of uncertainty, doubt and guilt which plague a parent, while we would be amongst our own. I think it was a tacitly agreed strategy to arrive early so that all this could be got over with without too many others milling around. The loudness and hattedness of Other Parents were not conducive to the particular Fry tokens of love: tiny exertions of pressure on the hands and tight little nods of the head that stood for affection and deep, unspoken understanding. A slightly forced smile and bitten underlip aside, Mummy always left the platform outwardly resolute, which was all that mattered.

All that taken care of, I slid down in my seat and examined the damp shivering thing opposite. He had chosen a window seat with its back to the engine as if perhaps he wanted to be facing homewards and not towards the ghastly unknown destination.

"You must be a new boy," I said.

A brave nod and a great spreading of scarlet in downy, hamstery cheeks.

"My name's Fry," I added. "That's my bro talking next door."

24. Look carefully at lines 2–3. What do we have examples of in these lines?

Select all that are correct.

A A simile

B Alliteration

C Personification

D A metaphor

E Repetition

25. Which TWO words would the narrator be most likely to use to describe Bunce?

A Stoical

B Extroverted

C Anxious

D Unhappy

Marking Guidance

For each question, the maximum number of marks available is shown.

Where questions require multiple answers and use the rubric, 'Select all that are correct', negative marking should also be applied, whereby 1 mark is deducted for each incorrect answer selected down to 0 marks (note that the number of marks per question cannot be negative).

For example:

If a question is worth 2 marks and requires options A, B and C to be selected:

Award 2 marks for A, B and C selected or 1 mark for any two correct answers selected.

Award 1 mark for A, B, C and D or E selected (2 marks – 1 incorrect = 1 mark).

Award 0 marks for A, B, C, D and E selected (2 marks – 2 incorrect = 0 marks).

Award 0 marks for A, B and E selected or equivalent (1 mark – 1 incorrect = 0 marks).
